Legal pluralism and hybrid governance are two lines of research that address the interactions between state (official) and non-state (unofficial) norms. Both come to similar observations, yet they seem hardly aware of each other's existence. With very few exceptions, the one does not refer to the other.

Legal Pluralism in Indonesia "To speak of the Indonesian language is nonsense, but to speak of Indonesian law makes quite good sense," said Cornelis van Vollenhoven in 1920. [2] He assumed that there were about 19 typical ethnic regions in this country [3] and that's why Indonesia would never have one single national language. But, thanks to the intervention of western legal tradition, he ...
