I was quite disappointed with Linda Jaivin's Quarterly Essay and feel it was a waste of money. The substance of it could have been said in three or four pages. It is not clear what fundamental point Jaivin is trying to make as her essay is so loosely constructed and so discursive, not at all an argued case for a clearly stated position. It's a ...

QUARTERLY ESSAY 52 Found in Translation . Correspondence. Julie Rose ... for an avid non-specialist Quarterly Essay readership, which also manages to feel urgent. Translators have been talking translation for some time now, and Jaivin's essay is a useful synthesis of what some of them have been saying; but they've largely been talking to each other. It's nice when a broader audience is ...

Quarterly Essay 52, Found in Translation: In Praise of a ...

The last quarterly essay of the year usually finds readers tired of politics and looking for a fresh topic. Well, Linda Jaivin delivers. This eclectic assemblage of experiences, insights, taboos and tips is both a hoot and a timely reminder that neither the written or spoken word is usually what it seems.

Quarterly Essay 52: Found in Translation. In Praise of a Plural World. Whether we're aware of it or not, we spend much of our time in this globalised world in the act of translation. Language is a big part of it, of course, as anyone who has fumbled with a phrasebook in a foreign country will know, but behind language is something far more challenging to translate: culture. As a traveller, a ...
