Renato Canova is a widely-renown coach of some of the most elite middle and long-distance athletes in the world. His runners routinely medal at World Championship and Olympic races and place highly at major marathons. I've done a good bit of writing on this blog about his training methods, and those posts are some of the most popular of all of my articles.

Over the years, many coaches developed their methods by modifying Lydiard's programs, while keeping in line with basic principles, whereas some successful coaches like, Gabriele Rosa, Renato Canova, etc. developed their methods in contrast to Lydiard's training principles. For e.g. Renato Canova's method focusses on speed and raw power during the early phase and moving on to longer threshold/tempo runs towards race day.

Canova's training system is based on increasing race-specific endurance. His Fundamental Period begins with high volume and low-intensity running along with uphill sprints and technical exercises. During the Special Period, training sessions move toward speeds that are closer to the athlete's goal race pace but still relatively far away.
