During Hurricane Sandy, I read two novels by David Lodge. Both are in his "campus trilogy" of professor novels. Changing Places is about a high-powered American and a nebbishy Brut (both English professors) who swap places and whose lives begin to resemble each other oddly. And Small World is about a bunch of professors (including the two from the first book) who fly around and encounter ...

'One of the very best English comic novelists of the post-war era' Time Out The plot lines of The Campus Trilogy, radiating from its hub at the redbrick University of Rummidge, trace the comic adventures of academics who move outside familiar territory. Beginning in the late 60s Changing Places follows the undistinguished English lecturer Philip Swallow and hotshot American professor Morris ...

~~David Lodge Changing Places Analysis~~

It is only by "changing places" that they become themselves, albeit in a different environment. Even the behaviour of their wives change when subjected to the opposite cultural influences. Admittedly, the setting of the "exchange" in the late 60s (with all the references to student protests and pot smoking in university campuses) has tended to date the book a bit.

The Campus Trilogy (Changing Places, Small World and Nice Work) are set at a fictional university in the English Midlands town of "Rummidge", modelled on Birmingham. The novels share characters, notably the Rummidge English literature lecturer Philip Swallow and his American counterpart, Professor Morris Zapp, who aspires to be "the highest paid teacher of Humanities in the world".

~~The Campus Trilogy : David Lodge : 9780143120209~~

David Lodge's campus novel trilogy are three very clever novels. The first (Changing Places) is a comic analysis of British and American university systems, as well as a parody of narrative structures (with each chapter written in a different style).

~~A David Lodge Trilogy by David Lodge~~

Changing Places is the fifth novel by the British author David Lodge, and the first of his so-called "Campus Trilogy". It was published in 1975. The University of Rummidge, a middling redbrick establishment in the English Midlands, and Euphoria State University, a leading institution at Plotinus on the west coast of America, have long had an exchange programme based on nothing more than a ...

Changing Places (1975) is the first "campus novel" by British novelist David Lodge. The subtitle is "A Tale of Two Campuses", and thus both the title and subtitle are literary allusions to Charles Dickens' A Tale of Two Cities. It is the first text in Lodge's 'Campus Trilogy' of novels, followed by Small World (1984) and Nice Work (1988).

Lodge's Changing Places is the first novel in his Campus Trilogy. It follows a very simple story (or perhaps formula or script are more appropriate terms): two professors, one from the United States and the other from England, exchange positions and fill their counterpart's teaching position for six months.

Naturally, this is the ending Lodge chooses for CHANGING PLACES. One day, I will surely read SMALL WORLD and NICE WORK, the two remaining books in Lodge's THE CAMPUS TRILOGY. And when doing so, I'll expect good books that are more clever than deep. Recommended.
