Raven shrugged. "I guess the new treatment I was trying failed."
"You didn't mention anything about a treatment. I thought your leg improved on its own when you disappeared." Raven lowered herself to her chair and placed her knapsack on the floor. "I don't like talking about it." "Right." Patrick didn't sound convinced.

Raven put the milk on the counter and jogged to the bathroom. In the mirror, she caught sight of a strange woman and shrieked. The woman had long, shiny black hair. Her eyes were a sparkling green and she had a lovely oval face with high cheekbones. It was the kind of face, Raven thought, that deserved to be painted.
